Introduction to the Shobogenzo and Its Significance

What Is the Shobogenzo?

The Shobogenzo (????), often translated as "Treasury of the True Dharma Eye," is a collection of writings by Dogen Zenji, compiled over his years of teaching in 13th-century Japan. Comprising 95 fascicles, the text encompasses sermons, poetic essays, and philosophical treatises that delve into the nature of reality, practice, and enlightenment.

The Importance of the "Mind Itself Is Buddha" Chapter

Among the many teachings within the Shobogenzo, the chapter "Mind Itself Is Buddha" (Japanese: Shinjin Gakudo) is pivotal. The English translation makes these profound teachings accessible to a global audience, transcending language barriers and cultural contexts.

The Core Teachings of "Mind Itself Is Buddha"

The Non-Dual Nature of Mind and Buddha

Understanding Buddha-Nature

Buddha-nature refers to the fundamental enlightenment potential inherent in all sentient beings.

Dogen asserts that this Buddha-nature is not something external or separate but is intrinsic to the very mind itself.

Key Point: Mind is Buddha

- The mind, when understood correctly, reveals its true nature as Buddha.
- There is no need for special practices to attain Buddha-nature since it is already present within the mind.
- Recognizing this truth leads to liberation and awakening.

The Illusion of Separateness

Dogen emphasizes that the perceived division between ordinary mind and Buddha is an illusion created by delusion. Recognizing the unity of mind and Buddha dissolves mental barriers and leads to direct realization.

Practice and Realization

The practice in Zen is not separate from enlightenment but is the very expression of Buddha-mind. Meditation, mindful activity, and everyday life are all manifestations of awakening.

- Zazen (seated meditation): the primary practice to realize the true nature of mind.
- Everyday life: an opportunity to embody Buddha-mind in action.

Key Concepts Explored in the English Edition

The Nature of Mind as Emptiness and Form

Dogen discusses the concept that mind embodies both emptiness and form, a core teaching in Mahayana Buddhism. Recognizing that mind is both empty and manifesting reveals the dynamic and interdependent nature of reality.

The Unity of Practice and Enlightenment

In Shobogenzo, Dogen emphasizes that practice itself is enlightenment. The act of sitting in meditation is not merely a means to attain enlightenment but is the expression of Buddha-mind in action.

The Role of Language and Paradox

Dogen often uses paradoxical statements to point beyond conceptual thinking. For example, "Mind itself is Buddha" challenges us to see beyond dualistic notions and approach direct realization.

Recognizing Buddha-Nature in Daily Life

- Every thought, action, and moment is an expression of Buddha-mind.

- View these obstacles as opportunities to deepen understanding of the mind's true nature.
